Legislative Reports: Kelsey- Mike Jehle in lieu ofLegislative & FOAC Reports:

- Post-Bruen Gun Rights Cases Put Public Carry, NFA Rules & AR-15 Bans in Focus: by Sean Maloney; The 2025-2026 Supreme Court term marks a decisive juncture in the post-Bruen era. While administrative agencies and state legislatures have sought to circumvent the High Court's mandates through regulator "lawfare," the current docket presents a fundamental challenge to these tactics. The court is already considering a major Second Amendment questions involving public carry and prohibited-person statutes, while pending cert petitions and lower-court litigation could tee up the next fights over common-use arms and NFA registration. Two key Firearms cases Wolford v. Lopez and Viramontes v. Cook County.
 - Wolford v. Lopez – (Argued on January 20, 2026) – Legal question: Whether a state may constitutionally designate all private property open to the public as "sensitive places" by default – Synopsis: Petitioners challenge Hawaii's Act 52, which establishes a "default rule" prohibiting the carrying of firearms on all private property open to the public unless the owner provides express authorization.
 - Viramontes v. Cook County – (U.S. pet. for cert. filed) – Legal Question: Whether semi-automatic rifles, such as the AR-15, are "arms" in common use for lawful purposes – Synopsis: Viramontes v. Cook County challenges Cook County's ban on so-called "assault weapons," including AR-15-platform and similar semiautomatic rifles. The petition asks whether these commonly owned firearms are protected "arms" under the Second Amendment and whether local governments may ban them by labeling them unusually dangerous or militaristic. The case remains at the certiorari stage, meaning the Supreme Court has not yet agreed to hear it. If review is granted, Viramontes could become a major vehicle for deciding whether bans on modern semiautomatic rifles can survive Heller, Bruen, and the "common use" doctrine.
- Three NFA Lawsuits Put SBR & Suppressor Registry on Path to Supreme Court: by Dave Workman; Attorneys in one of three cases challenging registration requirements for suppressors and short-barreled rifles have filed for summary judgement. It's the latest move to remove NRA restrictions. All three legal actions are grounded in the aftermath of President Donald Trump's "Big Beautiful Bill," passed last summer, which eliminated the $200 tax on certain classes of firearms, including the SBRs and suppressors. According to SAF found and Executive Vice President Alan Gottlieb, "We have the best opportunity in almost a century to end the registration scheme for silencers and short-barreled rifles under the NFA." Gottlieb said SAF has seized the moment – a "once-in-a-lifetime opportunity" in his words – to support three separate cases challenging the NFA all at the same time. He expressed the confidence that SAF and other plaintiffs will prevail. The Brown case (Missouri), the Jensen Case (Texas), and Roberts Case

(Kentucky). All state in all these cases is the chance to erase a registration requirement dating back to the 1930s, when the National Firearms Act was passed. Because the $200 tax was eliminated by Trump's legislation last year, the requirement should be null because the tax justifying registration no longer exists. Under federal law, a rifle with a barrel shorter than 16 inches, or certain firearms made from rifles with an overall length under 26 inches, is treated as a short -barreled rifle and remains subject to the NFA's registration regime. Plaintiffs argue that SBRs are protected arms commonly possessed for lawful purposes and that the government cannot keep tax-enforcement registration scheme in place after Congress reduced the relevant tax to zero. Any case, or all three cases combined, successfully challenging the constitutionality of the NFA would literally set the gun control movement on its ears, and dramatically change the legal landscape where the Second Amendment is concerned. This is what makes these cases so important, and why both sides in the gun rights v. gun control battle are watching them closely.
